Theatrical And Otherwise—Remarks In The Foyer.

"PUDD'NHEAD WILSON." That famous play "Pudd'nhead Wilson" will be the attraction Friday night at the opera house. The Atlanta Journal, January 8, 1898, says:

Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson" was presented at the Lyceum last night and was, without doubt, one of the rarest dramatic treats of the season.

The play is a vivid and truthful picture of Southern life, the plot deeply interesting and skillfully worked out, and the characters true to life. It is, in fact, an ideal play. It was interpreted by a first-class company, in which there were no weak spots.

Theodore Hamilton, an actor of the old school, and one of the best now on the boards, portrayed the quaint character of the title role in the most artistic manner. He won the sympathy of the audience early in the evening and made every heart thrill with every emotion as the play progressed. The role could have been entrusted to no better hands. The other parts were all played by capable actors.

The sale of seats begins to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

Cancer Of the Face.

Mrs. Laura E. Mims, of Smithville, Ga., says: "A small pimple of a strawberry color appeared on my cheek; it soon began to grow rapidly, notwithstanding all efforts to check it. My eye became terribly inflamed, and was so swollen that for quite a while I could not see. The doctors said I had Cancer of the most malignant type, and after exhausting their efforts without doing me any good, they gave up the case as hopeless. When informed that my father had died from the same disease, they said I must die, as hereditary Cancer was incurable."

"At this crisis, I was advised to try S.S.S., and in a short while the Cancer began to discharge and continued to do so for three months, then it began to heal. I continued the medicine a while longer until the Cancer disappeared entirely. This was several years ago and there has been no return of the disease."

QUARANTINING.

Several Papers Read at the Convention in Mobile, Ala.

Resolutions Introduced for the Establishment of a Uniform System of Quarantine and Health Laws—Line Between State and National Quarantine.

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 11.—There was added attendance at the quarantine convention Thursday. The first paper read was on "Quarantine as it Affects Personal Rights," by Prof. G. D. Sands, of the law department, University of Mississippi. He defined to what extent quarantine law can go without coming in conflict with constitutional rights of citizens; the action of such law is extremely limited. The paper was discussed by Judge H. A. Austill, of Mobile, A. L. McLeod, of Mobile, Dr. W. H. Sanders, state health officer of Alabama, read a paper upon "National, State and Local Quarantines, How Best to Adjust Their Differences." He held that there must be harmony between the national, state and local quarantine, and harmony would be promoted by making the state supreme in its own borders, the function of general government being to aid and to co-operate with state authorities. The system he advocated is a national bureau of public health, in which all states would have a voice and all states have equal rights in making rules and regulations. Under such regulations a complete system of local quarantine can be organized. Dr. Sanders outlined details of his plan, and in conclusion expressed his strong objection to placing all power in officers directed by a central head far removed from the scene of action. Discussion of this subject followed. Mr. Farrer, of New Orleans, introduced a resolution calling for a national marine quarantine, assisting state maritime quarantine, second, for an interstate compact establishing a uniform system of quarantine and health laws; third, for the cession to United States authorities over localities where placed the national quarantine station; fourth, for a definition for a line between state and national quarantine. Referred to the committee on resolutions.

The committee on resolutions reported at the afternoon session a resolution approving the passage by congress of an anti-visitation law. After some discussion a motion to table was lost and the resolution was adopted.

DESPERATE FIGHT

Between Two Young Men at a Dance Near Atlanta, Ga.—One Dead, the Other May Die.

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 11.—Charles Brown, a 17-year-old boy, shot and killed Clint Suttles at a dance on the outskirts of the city Wednesday night. Both young men were well known in the city. Suttles was a notorious fighter and has always been regarded as a dangerous man. Wednesday night Brown went into the dance hall late and Suttles began cursing him. Brown resented and Suttles pulled a knife and cut him. Brown fled to a back and Suttles followed. Brown pulled his pistol and shot Suttles through the head, but the desperate man still followed with his knife in his hand. He pulled Brown out of the back in which he had taken refuge, and throwing him to the ground commenced cutting him again. Brown used his pistol once more and shot his assailant dead. Brown is seriously cut and may die of his injuries.

The Madrid Herald Called the Late Minister Incompetent.

MADRID, Feb. 11.—The publication in the United States of Minister De Lome's letter to Senor Canalejas, the text of which has been called here, revives public interest in the Herald's recent ratings of the minister's incompetence. The Herald on January 28 quoted a list of other instances of Senor De Lome's slowness under the spread heading, "Let Dupuy Take a Rest."

FORTIFICATIONS.

Appropriation Bill Amended and Reported to the Senate Committee—The Amount Carried by the Measure Is Over Nine Million Dollars.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—A number of members of the senate committee on foreign relations favorable to the Hawaiian annexation treaty held an informal meeting in Senator Frye's committee room Friday for the purpose of considering the future course to be pursued with reference to the treaty. The meeting resulted from Senator Teller's suggestion made in executive session a few days since that the treaty should be abandoned, as much because of the lack of votes to pass it, and that annexation be accomplished through the means of direct legislation. There was a thorough discussion of the situation at Friday's meeting, the result of which was a decision to find an early method of determining the strength of the annexation sentiment. Accordingly Senator Davis will make an effort to get the treaty up in the senate next week with the view of exhausting the speeches as soon as possible. He will then attempt to secure a test which will reveal the voting strength of the friends of the measure and locate the senators now considered doubtful.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The exact amount carried by the fortification bill is $9,052,494, as against $4,144,912 carried by the bill as it passed the house.

The principal item of increase is that of $2,000,000 for the construction of gun and mortar batteries, making a total of $2,000,000. The appropriation in this instance is for works now in process of construction. The senate also added more than a million dollars to the sum appropriated for the purchase or manufacture of 12-inch breech-loading mortars.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—A number of members of congress especially interested in postal matters and Gen. Shallenberger, the second assistant postmaster general, will be present Saturday at the opening in New York of circuit No. 2 of the pneumatic tube system built for the transmission of the mails. The second circuit runs from the general postoffice to Station H, or the Grand Central railroad station, and is three and a half miles in length. Notice that it was ready for operation reached the post office department Friday, and Gen. Gary being unable to attend the ceremony delegated Mr. Shallenberger to represent him. Good results are looked to from the new tube. Greater facility in handling the immense amount of mail matter passing between the post office and the Grand Central station will be the greatest advantage gained. As a result of the introduction of the service the postal officials believe that the resort will be had to the mails for hasty communication by many persons who heretofore have used the telegraph for that purpose.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The war department Friday made public the advice received from Capt. P. H. Ray, of the Eighth infantry, who was sent to Alaska to report on the conditions in the mining country. The reports embrace a period running from October 3 to November 3 and are dated from Circle City and Fort Yukon. They show a very serious state of affairs, that trouble is threatened at various places and that there is serious danger at some points of lack of food owing to a large measure to the failure of the transportation companies to get in sufficient supplies. In a report dated Circle City, October 3, Capt. Ray recommends, should the department decide to establish a post on the Upper river, that the mouth of Mission or American creek be chosen as the site with a sub-post if necessary at Circle City. The best interests of the service, he says, requires permanent garrisons to be located well away from mining towns, so that the troops if required to act will not be biased by local influence.

Y., and Dresden, O., all fourth-class post offices, will be assigned to the third class April 1.

ONE DISPATCH

Says That Spain Regrets the Dupuy De Lome Incident.

Another Dispatch Says That Spain Does Not Disavow Responsibility for the Utterances of De Lome and Does Not Consider a Disclaimer Necessary.

New York, Feb. 14.—A dispatch to the World from Madrid says:

A formal statement of regret at and censure of Dupuy De Lome's conduct, coupled with an expression of sincere desire that the Canojas letter incident shall not impair the present friendly relations between the governments of Spain and the United States or interrupt the negotiations for a commercial treaty, will be made by Foreign Minister Gullon immediately following the gazetting of the royal decree accepting Senor De Lome's resignation and appointing his successor as Spain's representative at Washington.

On the other hand, the Washington correspondent of the World says that Spain has not disavowed responsibility for the utterances of Senor De Lome and does not consider that any disclaimer of that character is necessary. From Spain's point of view the incident is closed, not only as to De Lome's reflections upon the president and the American people, but as to his declaration that autonomy is a mockery and reciprocity a fraud. Such is the unsatisfactory information contained in the long expected statement from Mr. Woodford, received late Saturday night.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—A third message has been sent to Minister Woodford directing him to make a peremptory demand upon the Spanish government for a disavowal of the personal and political points of De Lome's letter. Gen. Woodford is sharply rebuked for his seeming indifference, and the suggestion is conveyed through him to Premier Sagasta that unless the De Lome incident is closed by Tuesday next the United States will suspend diplomatic relations with Spain.

ENSIGN BRECKENRIDGE.

Of the Torpedo Boat Cushing, Washed Overboard and Drowned.

New York, Feb. 14.—Ensign Joseph C. Breckenridge, executive officer of the torpedo boat Cushing, was washed overboard and drowned during a stormy passage from Key West to Havana, says the Havana correspondent of the Herald. The Cushing arrived Friday night with the body and signalled the Maine for medical assistance. All efforts to resuscitate Ensign Breckenridge were futile. The body was sent by the Cushing to Key West Saturday.

The Cushing left Key West Friday morning with stores for the Maine. She pitched heavily in a fearful sea. She slowed engines at one o'clock in sight of the coast of Cuba. Immediately afterward Ensign Breckenridge, who was stationed forward was carried off his feet by a heavy sea. He clutched the lifeline as he was swept aft. The line parted, however, and Ensign Breckenridge went overboard. Seamen Everett and Coppage started to go to the rescue in a lifeboat, but it was swamped in lowering and the men were thrown into the water.

Ensign Breckenridge's strength was fast failing, as he was encumbered with heavy oilskin boots. The Cushing was running through the sea deluged from stem to stern. As Breckenridge was going under the cook, Daniel Atkins, went overboard to the rescue. The Cushing finally obeyed her helm and swung around and maneuvered near the men in the water. Atkins, Coppage and Everett were rescued by lines, and Ensign Breckenridge was taken on board in the same manner, Atkins fastening the line to him.

On the arrival in Havana the Maine's surgeon was ashore. A message was sent Dr. Burgess. Burgess said it was doubtful if medical aid, if available, could have saved the ensign. Lieut. Gleaver, commander of the Cushing, is heartbroken.

Breckenridge's father is inspector general of the army in Washington. The chief officer of the customs has asked the general government if he has the right to collect customs duties on the provisions brought by the Cushing to the Maine.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The following cablegram has been received at the state department from Consul General Lee, at Havana, dated Friday:

"Ensign J. R. Breckenridge, of the Cushing, was washed overboard and drowned a few hours before the arrival of the vessel in this port. The body was recovered and I am arranging to have it embalmed and sent home tomorrow."

Capt. Sigsbee, of the Maine, makes the following report to the navy department on the same subject:

"Ensign Breckenridge, of the Cushing, fell overboard in heavy sea by parting of life line and drowned. Body recovered. Break news to family. Will send body back to Key West Sunday by Olivette if practicable. Otherwise by Cushing. Will send Cushing back when sea subsides."

The navy department has given orders that a naval officer shall meet the remains, which are expected to reach Key West Sunday afternoon on the Olivette. They will be interred at the home of the young officer at Lexington, Ky.

KANSAS PACIFIC.

Representatives of the Reorganization Committee Offer to Increase

The Committee's Bid to an Amount Equal to the Principal of the Government's Indebtedness—Sale Will, Therefore, Take Place February 16, 17, 18.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 14.—There will be no postponement of the sale of the Kansas Pacific railway set for February 16, 17 and 18, and ex-Gov. George Hoadley, of New York, special counsel for the government in the Union Pacific cases, arrived in St. Louis Friday for the purpose of asking the United States district court to postpone the sale and allow the government the privilege of redeeming the claims of the first mortgage bondholders on the eastern and middle divisions. He was also to ask for the appointment of a receiver.

By this means it was expected that the government would be able to obtain a better price than the reorganization committee had offered.

Mr. Hoadley was met here by attorneys representing the reorganization committee and the stockholders. They all held a conference. The representative of the reorganization committee offered to increase the committee's bid to an amount equal to the principal of the government's indebtedness. The offer was accepted. The gentlemen appeared before Judge Sanborn in chambers Saturday, and announced that they had reached an agreement. The sale will therefore be good.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Attorney General Griggs received a dispatch from Judge Hoadley, the government's legal representative in the matter of the sale of the Kansas Pacific railroad, stating that an arrangement had been effected by which the Union Pacific reorganization committee would pay the principal of the government's lien in full.

CUBAN EXPEDITION

Sails From a Point on Peace River With Arms and Ammunition.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 14.—A special to the Times Union and Citizen from Tampa, Fla., says: Almost under the nose of Edward Gaylor, superintendent of Pinkerton's Spanish spies, a large Cuban expedition left Tampa Saturday night and Sunday night sailed from a point on Peace river.

The men, about 70 in number, walked through the streets of Tampa about 2 o'clock Sunday morning and boarded a special train, which quickly bore them to a point near where they were to embark, and there they remained in hiding until Sunday night, when a tug took them out to the steamer which bore them away to Cuba, Col. Emilio Nunez being in charge of the steamer. It is said Gen. Sangrilly is the real commander and color is given this rumor by the fact that when the men left here they were in charge of Col. Lechuga, who was first lieutenant of the personal staff selected by Sangrilly when he failed to get away from Jacksonville. Superintendent Gaylor, hisson and another Pinkerton man have been here looking for Sangrilly, they believing he was somewhere near. It is alleged that the Cubans have sent Sangrilly away on this trip to get rid of him in the United States. The detectives are totally ignorant of the departure of this expedition.

It is understood 5,000 rifles, 6,000 pounds of dynamite, 200,000 rounds of cartridges and a large lot of supplies made up the cargo.

OPERA HOUSE

At Moline, Ill. With Contents, Totally Destroyed by Fire.

MOLINE, Ill., Feb. 14.—The Auditorium opera house, with its contents, was totally destroyed by fire Sunday evening. Adjoining store buildings also suffered from fire and water. The total loss is estimated at $80,000. The flames cut off egress from the Auditorium and there were several thrilling rescues by ropes and ladders. The building contained the large plant of the Porter Printing Co., Electric Laundry, Commercial Heating Plant, Postal Telegraph Co., etc. Arnold's "Fun-makers" troupe lost their entire outfit. The loss is covered by insurance.

Half a dozen persons were in the dormitories of the building and narrowly escaped burning to death. All the stairways having been burned. Two men slid down a rope from the third floor and two women and two men were rescued by means of ladders. The building was a three-story brick and is a total loss.

CHAPTER I.

The train stopped at Sidington just long enough to have a trunk thrown off and allow one passenger to alight. The trunk was mine, the passenger myself.

Then the train went on again, the engine puffing and hissing in a vain attempt to acquire suddenly the greatest speed, seemingly in great impatience that it had been compelled to stop at all—which was not to be wondered at; for, when I gazed around, from what I could see, Sidington was nothing more than a station house, a few miles of railroad, and a wide stretch of hilly country.

There was a young fellow of about my age standing in the doorway of the waiting-room. He was regarding me with evident curiosity. I stepped up to him. "Where is the station agent?" I asked, briefly.

"Why, I'm the agent," the fellow replied, in drawing tones.

"Isn't there any town here, or at least a settlement? Is this?" sweeping my arm around in a comprehensive gesture—"is this all there is of Sidington?"

"You kin see about all there is from here," the agent replied, with a grin. Then, to my surprise, he stepped out on the platform, locked the door, and put the key in his pocket.

"Are you going to leave the station?" I inquired.

"Yes. No use stayin' around. There ain't no more trains till three o'clock, when a couple of coals pass. This ain't much of a station."

"But what's to be done about my luggage?" I asked, impatiently, pointing toward a large trunk and several bundles at the upper end of the platform.

The agent looked in the direction I indicated. "Oh, that's all yours, is it? I thought maybe it might be. Got checks, I suppose?"

"Yes, certainly. Here they are." He took the checks, gazed at them doubtfully for a moment, then slowly went to the pile of luggage.

"I guess it's all right," he said, after taking the checks from the various articles of baggage and carefully comparing them with the ones I had given him. "You kin take 'em along."

Now the trunk was large and heavy, and I turned on the fellow with a touch of anger, for at first I thought he was making game of me. But when I saw the expression of stolid indifference on his face, it struck me he was simply dull and stupid.

"Thank you," I finally said. "It is very kind of you to allow me to take my own property. Perhaps you will show further kindness by telling me how I am to take it. The bundles I might possibly manage, but the trunk, as you see, is large, and, I can assure you, heavy, and I really should prefer not to carry it, if any other way of removal might be devised."

For a moment it seemed to me the blast of sarcasm produced an effect, for just a shadow of a smile appeared on the agent's face. It lasted but an instant, however, and the blank stare with which he had viewed my belongings took its place.

"Where you want go?" he finally asked, in an indifferent manner.

"I would like to go to Nelsonville, if there could be found a way to get my trunk there too," I replied.

"So you're goin' to Nelsonville?" He favored me with a quick, searching glance, which was immediately withdrawn when he caught my eye. "Nelsonville's about three miles from here," he continued. "Tain't much more of a place than Sidington. You ain't goin' to stay there, are you?"

I was about to answer sharply that that was my business, but, remembering the curiosity that the advent of a stranger generally causes in the minds of country folks, I told him my plans were not definite.

"Tain't that I want to be impertinent," he went on, with a grin; "but I thought if you was only goin' to stay there over night you might leave your trunk in the station."

"Well, I had intended to spend two or three months, possibly longer, in Nelsonville. It depends altogether on how I like it. So, you see, I must have my trunk."

"Two or three months!" He gazed down at the track for a moment, and then turned quickly toward me as though an important idea had just come to him.

"There ain't no hotel at Nelsonville. Praps you didn't know that," he said. "It will make no difference to me. I have made arrangements for accommodation. You see, I am going to occupy a portion of my own property."

"Oh, you own a place there, then?"

"Yes, the old Nelson homestead is mine. It descended to me from my grandfather, Abram Nelson. He has been dead 18 years. I have not seen the place since. I was quite a small boy then. And now, as I have plenty of leisure, the desire is natural to revisit the scenes of boyhood days."

The agent listened to my words, and I was considerably amused to note the interest they inspired—an interest, I thought then, due wholly to a country fellow's curiosity.

"If I have told you all you wish to know about myself," I went on, "will you kindly tell me, as a return favor, where a team can be procured to cart me and my belongings over to my place?"

The fellow grinned at me, as though there had been something in my words of an amusing nature; but finally he did give me the desired information:

"Why, I guess maybe Jake Hunsicker kin take you over. He's just gettin' in the oats, but if you pay him, p'raps he'll leave the oats be long enough to drive to Nelsonville and back. Anyway, he kin take you after supper, if you want to wait till then."

"And where does Mr. Hunsicker live?" I asked.

The agent pointed to a clump of trees on the summit of a hill about a quarter of a mile distant. "You kin see just a part of the roof through the trees. The road runs uphill right past the house."

"How about these things while I am gone? Will they be safe?" I inquired.

"Oh, yes, no one'll take 'em. It'll be all right," he replied, indifferently, as though he did not care whether my luggage would be secure or not. Then he gave one more glance at me, grinned in his dull way, sprang from the platform, and went off down the road.

All the country for miles about Nelsonville had been familiar to my boyhood. But now, after an absence of 18 years, I could hardly recognize this part of it.

The railroad had been built some five years before, and that made, in itself, a great change. The station was in a valley, and the fertile fields and dark green forests on the bounding hills were all very beautiful.

But, as there were few houses, and those in the distance, there was a loneliness about the place which seemed to find a counterpart in my life. For I was a social Ishmael, an outcast, burdened with the suspicion of a crime of which I was innocent. The fact that nothing could be proved against me, in the minds of most people, only indicated that I was such an adept in roguery as to be able to cover up all proof of my guilt.

It was now a year that the cloud had rested over my good name. The first six months of this time I had vainly attempted to live down the general suspicion. But I found the houses of even those I had considered true friends closed against me, and so, heart-sore and almost despairing, I fled to Europe, hoping to find partial forgetfulness, or at least a rest from cruel tongues. Unfortunately for my peace, Americans read the newspapers, and I had only to mention my name to my countrymen whom I met during my trip abroad to be asked if I was the one whose name was mentioned in connection with the great bank robbery in Philadelphia. I soon tired of this and of being compelled to tell over and over again the circumstances of that affair, so resolved to go back to my native land, avoid the city where I was so well and so unfavorably known, and seek rest and peace amid the scenes of my childhood. I also determined, after my arrival, to begin a thorough investigation of the robbery on my own hook. The reason I had not done this before will be stated later.

The solitude of Sidington, the lack of a welcoming hand, the knowledge that I had outgrown all boyish estimates and would therefore find the old homestead no longer encompassed about by the romantic interest which a youngster's mind was able to conjure up—all this did not tend to raise my depressed spirits, and my heart was heavy within me as I plodded up the long, dusty hill toward the home of Mr. Hunsicker.

A delicious breeze was blowing at the top of the hill, and I paused a moment under the shade of the maples, to bare my perspiring brow to the cool influence.

Then I slowly walked up the shady path leading to the porch, keeping my hat in my hand. Thoped Mr. Hunsicker would be at the house for dinner, for I determined not to go out into the hot fields to search for him.

A knock at the open front door caused an interruption in the clatter of dishes which proceeded from an inner room, and very soon shuffling footsteps approached the door.

A tall, stoop-shouldered individual, dressed in a brown cotton shirt, blue overalls and cowhide boots, loomed up out of the gloom of the darkened rooms. From the look of astonishment on the man's face when he saw me, I judged the advent of a stranger was a rare occurrence to this household.

"Will you haul me and a trunk to Nelsonville?" I asked.

My question produced a blank stare from the old fellow, and his jaws, which had been busy masticating a mouthful of food, ceased operations. I gave him time, and when he had partially recovered from his surprise, again addressed him.

"Do you understand English?" I asked.

"Ach, y-e-e indeed!" he replied, after he had hastily swallowed the food.

"And is your name Hunsicker—Jacob Hunsicker?" I continued.

He nodded a reply.

"The station agent down at the depot said that perhaps I could get you to take me over to Nelsonville. Will you do it?"

"V-ell, bud, ve're just at de oats," Mr. Hunsicker said.

"I am willing to wait until after supper, which will not interfere with the harvesting. You will be well paid for your trouble."

Hereupon the rather shrill voice of a woman came from the inner room. She spoke in Pennsylvania Dutch, but I was able to make out that her words conveyed a command for her husband to comply with my request. She also added that he should not offer to do the work too cheaply.

I smiled as I recognized in this one of the provident traits of a Pennsylvania Dutch farmer's wife.

"I'll pay you well," I reiterated.

"I guess you should gif me feefty cent," Mr. Hunsicker said, in a doubtful manner, as though he really did not expect to receive that amount, but was determined to get all out of me that he could.

"It is settled, then, that you take me over. We'll not quarrel about the terms. Allow me to rest here under the cool shade the remainder of the afternoon and give me some supper, and you shall have a dollar."

The farmer was quite overwhelmed by my munificent offer, as was also the hitherto unseen female. For the woman peeped from behind the door of the kitchen to have a look at me.

I bowed to her, and she acknowledged my salutation by coming forward.

"I guess you haf no dinner," she said, in a hospitable way.

The truth was, I had had none, and, being rather healthy, I was not sorry to be ushered to the table, where I was bountifully supplied.

During the meal the woman favored me with many searching glances, which I attributed to her curiosity.

After I had finished my repast we again returned to the front porch.

"You have a nice place here," I said, handing the man a cigar. "The house is new, is it not?"

"About five year old," he answered; and then his wife took up the conversation.

"Ve rented a farm ofer at Nelsonville for a long time. Bud ve nefer had no childrens, so ve saved some money and bought dis farm," she said.

The woman was eager for a little gossip, and was bound to have it, in spite of the fact that the dinner dishes were awaiting her.

"Did you ever know old Abram Nelson, of Nelsonville?" I asked, willing to indulge her wish. "It's a long time now since he died—18 years."

"Yes, ve knew him. It was part of his farm ve rented after he died," the man made response.

I could not restrain a smile at his clumsy way of putting it, but before I could ask another question the woman came up to where I was standing and gazed earnestly into my face.

"Ach, Gott! It's true!" she exclaimed, clutching my arm. "It's Nel, little Nel! Ach Gott, I knew it!"

Then her excitement ended in a flood of tears. I gazed down at her in astonishment, and as I looked recollection came to me.

"Why, surely, I used to know you," I said, smiling down upon her. "You must be Sarah. You used to work at Grandfather Nelson's when I was a small boy, and took care of me during my visits."

"Ach, see! he knows me!" the woman exclaimed, turning toward her husband. "He could not forget Sarah! So, so. After so long a time. Ach, my! And now you are a man, and haf growed so big!"

I really should have explained before that my name is Nelson Conway. I had been rather a small, puny child, and my grandfather called me Little Nel.

Soon Jake went about his business harvesting the oats. Sarah and I sat all that afternoon under the cool shade, talking about old times.

My parents had been dead many years, and it was something new in my experience to be petted, deferred to and made much of. Sarah took up the acquaintance just where it had been broken off 18 years ago, and seemed imbued with an augmented adoration for me.

I felt there was one true, loyal soul in the world whom I could depend on, and, in the natural desire for sympathy and consolation, I recounted to her all my troubles, including the circumstances connected with the bank robbery and the suspicion under which I had groined in spirit for a year now.

"It seems as though I were fated to carry that load to the grave," I remarked, despondingly.

"Ach, no, indeed you von't. Don't you feel pad about it, Nel. You see it come right. Let dem come to me," Sarah continued, waxing indignant, "let dem come to me. I dell dem if a grandson of Abram Nelson is a thief. And dey find out some day."

Her assurances comforted and encouraged me very much. For I knew my life had been honorable and square, at least in all business relations, and her absolute trust in me, after all the cruel insinuations and the cold looks of suspicion, was balm to my wounded spirit.

There was another, the brightest, fairest and best of women, who also felt confidence in my integrity, or at least had done so; one whose affection I had gained. But I had not heard from her since immediately after the robbery, and whether her trust and love still remained unshaken I could not say. I had no reason to doubt her; but then time works wonderful changes in a woman's opinions, often.

After supper Jake drove me over to Nelsonville. Sarah accompanied us, of course. She would have been intensely pleased to have me stay at her own house, but I was longing for the rest and peace which the old homestead seemed to promise, and so could not be persuaded to change my plans.

At the corner of two roads near the house, dwelt an old widow, who had taken care of my place.

The large farm had been rented out in parcels to neighboring farmers, but the house had remained vacant ever since my grandfather's death.

We stopped at the widow's home for the key, and the old lady came along with us.

Soon I stood upon the porch and gazed around upon the scenes which had stamped themselves so strongly upon my boyhood's mind that even now, after all these years, they seemed wonderfully familiar. I missed the white-headed old gentleman, whose figure had been the most beautiful of all to my boyish mind. With a sigh I turned to the door, placed the key in the lock, turned the bolt, and entered, followed reverentially by Sarah and her husband, and Mrs. Snyder, the old widow.

TOO EMOTIONAL.

She Mistook an Icehouse for the Tomb of Washington.

If the men who become the objects of hero worship could see the evidence of the feeling they inspire, they would possibly be even more reconciled to leaving this sphere for any other, better or worse. Sometimes they do know; and then they need to exercise abundant charity.

An American who has lived much abroad says that he was present, on one occasion, when a country woman of his own met a famous poet. She saw the object of her idolatry. She rushed forward and struck an attitude.

"And is it possible," she cried, dramatically, "that I look upon Browning?"

One feels that Dr. Johnson, in the same circumstances, would have remarked, gruffly: "Don't be a fool, madam!"

Again, there are times when pathos is showered only upon the dead. T. F. Silleek says that on one of his holiday excursions he visited Mount Vernon, and there, in the grounds, he came upon a middle-aged lady, kneeling before a building at some distance from the monument. She was bathed in tears. Mr. Silleek walked up to her, and asked if she were in trouble.

"No, sir," said she, "thank you very much. I am not in trouble, but my patriotic feelings overcome me when I gaze upon the tomb of the Father of this Country."

"I quite understand," said Mr. Silleek, gently, "but, my dear madam, you have made a mistake. This is not the tomb of Washington. It is over yonder. This is the icehouse."

And drying her tears, the lady moved quietly away.—Youth's Companion.

"Like Hogs or Like Gentlemen."

Years ago, when it was more the fashion in Kansas than at present, United States District Attorney "Bill" Perry gave a "stag party" to his gentlemen friends at Fort Scott. He had procured a bountiful supply of cold beer for the delectation of his guests, but hid it away in an upper room as a post-prandial surprise. When the proper time arrived for the revelation of his surprise he said to the assembled company:

"Boys, I have a lot of cold beer upstairs, but before we start I want to know whether you intend to drink like gentlemen or like hogs."

"Oh, we'll drink like gentlemen; lead on, 'Billy,'" chorused a dozen voices in reply.

"That settles it," replied the jovial host, as a smile rippled over all three of his double chins. "I'll have to send for more beer. A hog away! knows when he's got enough."—Kansas City Journal.

Heredit.

It has been said that the training of a boy should begin with his grandmother. Where this precaution has been neglected there should be some charity for the boy if he does not turn out well, and the generous parent will not refuse to bear at least a portion of the responsibility.

"Your son Robert, Mr. Waxworth," remarked a teacher to the father of one of his pupils, "is not lacking in capacity to learn and has many good points, but he is apt to think that what he does is always right. He is very self-conceited."

"I know it," replied the father, with a deep sigh. "He gets that characteristic from his mother's folks. In other respects he takes after our side of the family."—Youth's Companion.

Missed Him Rather Late.

When Dr. Whewell, master of Trinity college, Cambridge, was a tutor he once invited a number of his men to a "wine"—as the entertainments of those days used to be called. Noticing a vacant place, he said to his servant: "Why is not Mr. Smith here?" "He is dead, sir," was the reply. "I wish you would tell me when my pupils die," was the indignant answer.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"Mortal," said the guide, in a sepulchral voice, to the blindfolded candidate whom he was conducting in a slow and solemn march around the darkened hall, "you are now approaching an ordeal that will test your fortitude to the utmost."

"Go ahead," answered Mr. Meeker, apathetically. "I think I can stand it. It isn't anything to what I'll catch when I go home."—Chicago Tribune.

REPRESENTATIVE MOUNT, the Oldham county Populist, has introduced a bill in the Kentucky Legislature to change the name of Carlisle county to William Jennings Bryan County. While the silver saints are being immortalized why not change Mercer to "Colonel Jack Chinn County," Woodford to "Joseph Clay Styles Blackburn County," Fayette to "Chas. J. Bronston County," and Kenton to "William Goebel County." And what's the matter with having an "Allen O. Myers County" and a "Col. Hez Lung County?"

DISPATCHES from Lincoln, Nebraska, state that workmen who were digging a well on Mr. Bryan's property have found gold bearing sand. Similar finds have been made in that vicinity and twenty miles away the gold bearing sand is being worked with profit. Providence must be trying to make a gold-bug out of Mr. Bryan.

Lexington Leader Talks Knowingly About The Postoffice Muddle.

The following in regard to the compromise effected in the Paris postoffice muddle appeared in yesterday's Leader, under the following caption: "Compromise between John L. Bosley and Sherman H. Stivers. Senator Deboe Decried It."

"The compromise between Editor John L. Bosley and Sherman H. Stivers for the Paris postoffice, by which the former becomes postmaster and the latter his deputy, is naturally disappointing to Mr. Hutchcraft, who expected to become deputy under Bosley, and to Miss Bashford, who expected to become deputy under Stivers.

"Republicans who returned from Washington to-day say that while Senator Deboe personally desired to appoint Bosley, he greatly disliked to reject Judge Denny's endorsement of Mr. Stivers.

"After the Senator had withdrawn his endorsement of Stivers, and practically committed himself to Bosley, great pressure was brought to bear on him from Kentucky to reconsider, and Judge Denny's insistence on the recognition of his recommendation as referee added to the embarrassment of the situation.

"While matters were in this condition, Stivers went to Washington and the fight grew more intense.

"Senator Deboe, who has had an unenviable task in trying to adjust differences between factions and reconcile the general obligations of the party organization in Kentucky with those naturally growing out of the senatorial election, listened with patience to the persistent appeals of the friends of Bosley and Stivers.

"Finally Senator Deboe took the bull by the horns, and suggested that the two candidates compromise, one taking the postmastership and the other the deputyship.

"Of course Messrs. Bosley and Stivers demurred to this arrangement, and each insisted that he was entitled to the appointment without conditions.

"Senator Deboe insisted that as compromises and concessions were the order of the day in so many other contests he saw no reason why the Paris matter should not be settled in the same way, relieving him of his embarrassment.

"The matter continued in this shape until Saturday, when the Senator announced as his ultimatum that he would fill no recommendation until Bosley and Stivers agreed to the compromise suggested; and if one agreed and the other refused he would appoint the one who was willing to accede to the agreement.

"This was heroic treatment and it did not take long for the two contestants to come to the conclusion that the obstinacy of either would result in the other bagging the game. Bosley held out the longest, and made a final personal appeal to Senator Deboe, but the latter insisted that the compromise was for the best interests of the party, and refused to yield anything from the position he had taken.

"And this is the way Messrs. Bosley and Stivers adjusted their rival claims and came home with half leaves in their pockets, to the natural disappointment of the worthy people who had hoped for a deputyship under one or the other.

"While the Bosley-Stivers compromise carries its personal disappointments, it is undoubtedly a wise political move, as it closes up the party ranks. All who took part in the contest recognized that both men were deserving in the highest degree. Both had been strong McKinley men in the primary contest in Kentucky. In the county, district and state conventions which sent delegates to St. Louis both rendered valuable service to the McKinley cause and the friends of both rightfully thought that they were entitled to recognition. Under the circumstances the compromise insisted upon by Senator Deboe is a happy one, and should make the party stronger in Bourbon county."

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure

Cures a Prominent Attorney.

M. R. C. PHELPS, the leading pension attorney of Belfast, N. Y., writes: "I was discharged from the army on account of ill health, and suffered from heart trouble ever since. I frequently had fainting and smothering spells. My form was bent as a man of 80. I constantly wore an overcoat, even in summer, for fear of taking cold. I could not attend to my business. My rest was broken by severe pains about the heart and left shoulder. Three years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, notwithstanding I had used so much patent medicine and taken drugs from doctors for years without being helped. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure restored me to health. It is truly a wonderful medicine and it affords me much pleasure to recommend this remedy to everyone."

Dr. Miles' Remedies are sold by all druggists under a positive guarantee, first bottle benefits or money refunded. Book on diseases of the heart and nerves free. Address, DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

A Mouse In a Mule's Head.

LAST week a mule owned by Nat Rogers, of Cane Ridge, died under peculiar circumstances. The malady, which seemed to be brain trouble, and which made the animal fractious, defied the skill of Dr. Jameson, and the mule suffered convulsion after convulsion, finally rushing into a pond and drowning. When the mule's head was opened a mouse was found in the animal's brain. It is thought that the mouse crawled up the mule's nose while the mule was eating in the barn.

Another strange case reported by Dr. Jameson concerns a horse owned by Green McDonald. After the animal died from a mysterious cause it was discovered that gall stones had completely stopped the flow of blood in a leading artery to a vital organ. Thirty gall stones were taken out, the largest an inch and a half long and an inch in diameter.

Contest Over Prisoners.

FRIDAY Deputy United States Marshal Short, of Berea, came to Paris to arrest John Channell, Luther Jones and Ed Washington, who are in jail here awaiting trial by the Circuit Court, on the charge of breaking into R. E. Young & Co's store at Cintonville. Marshal Short wanted the prisoners for an offense against the Federal government—breaking into the post office, which was located in R. E. Young & Co's store. Judge Parnell and County Attorney Dudson refused to give up the prisoners, contending that Short had no right to arrest the prisoners until they had been either acquitted or had served their sentence, which decision was sustained by United States District Attorney Smith, of Louisville.

Wm Shropshire, charged with disturbing a school near Jacksonville, was fined $7.50 by Judge Purnell.

Mr. Oliver's Organ Recital.

YIELDING to a special invitation from the members of the Ladies' Aid Society, Mr. Frank Slade Oliver, of Chicago, has remained in this city for the purpose of giving another organ recital in the Christian Church, which will occur Thursday evening, with the assistance of Mr. J. D. Cordon, tenor, of this city. A delightfully interesting programme will be presented by Mr. Oliver, and as is his custom at all recitals, he will preface each number with an informal talk relative to the composition and its composer.

The playing of Mr. Oliver at his recital last week has caused the greatest enthusiasm amongst music-lovers of Paris and there is every reason to expect a large audience at the Church Thursday evening. The admission will be fifty-cents for adults and twenty-five cents for children.

They Stole A Gobbler.

HARVE ALBERT and Alexander Watts, both colored, were sentenced Saturday by Judge Purnell to thirty days in jail at hard labor for stealing a gobbler from Andy Skillman, of Cane Ridge. The men were arrested by Constable Joe Williams. Mr. Skillman told the latter that he could have the fowl if he found it. After jailing the purloiners Constable Williams arrested the gobbler which was in hiding in a sack in a colored cafe on Eighth street. The turkey weighed thirty-one pounds dressed.

Shay was resting fairly well early last night, but his chances for recovery are not considered very hopeful.

The Monday Night Literary Club.

THE Monday Night Literary Club held an exceedingly pleasant meeting last night at Miss Olivia Buckner's. The program, which was appropriate for a St. Valentine's Day meeting, contained the following entertaining numbers: Paper—"Saint Valentine," Miss Etta McClintock; Instrumental solo, Miss Nannie Wilson; Reading, "The Story of Saint Weller and His Valentine," Rev. F. W. Eberhardt; Vocal Solo, Miss Alice Spears; general discussion, "Valentines."

We remove the "rough edges" from collars and cuffs and mould them round and smooth. It is a pleasure to wear our laundered linen.

THEY MEET TO-NIGHT.

They meet to-night, the one who closed his eyes
Unto the pain forever and the woe,
And one who found the mansions in the skies
In all their splendor long, long years ago.
What will they say when first their eyes shall meet?
Or will a silence take the place of words,
As only saints can know how strangely sweet
A rapture such as only Heaven affords?
Will she who went before ask first for those Left far behind, those whom she loved so well?
Or will the other, new to Heaven's repose,
Question of all its meanings—who can tell?
And will they wander where the flowers are deep
Beneath their feet there in the pastures
green,
Where fadeless blossoms o'er the hillsides
creep,
And where no piercing thorns are ever seen?
One went so long ago, and one to-night
Took the long journey far across the tide;
This only do I know, they meet to-night,
And meeting, both, I know, are satisfied.

IKE DAWSON'S GENEROSITY.

BY THOS. P. MONTFORT.

IKE DAWSON furnished a living example of the truth of the idea that there is something good in everybody. He illustrated the fact that there was something good in himself, and after that those who knew him were quite ready to believe that there was not a human being who was altogether bad. Dawson was not a cowboy, yet there was not a man who was better known on the range from one side of Kansas to the other. He owned no ranch, he neither bought nor reared any cattle, yet he was one of the most thrifty cattle dealers on the plains.

In plain words he was a cattle thief. He and four or five others formed a little band who thrived by stealing cattle from different herds and selling them to buyers who were not over scrupulous. Having got them at little expense he could afford to sell them cheap and consequently he had little trouble in finding purchasers.

Naturally, the cattlemen had no love for Dawson. They did not admire his style of business. He was nervous, progressive and energetic, and that was all right; but his loose way of accumulating property at the expense of other people was quite a different thing. That was not all right.

The cowboys had it in for Dawson, and if they could have ever got hold of him they would have forced him into involuntary retirement in short order. He would have made a more or less graceful exit from business at the end of a rope, following the example of more than one enterprising gentleman who had retired promptly and permanently from illegitimate cattle dealing on short notice.

Dawson was well aware of the feelings the cowboys entertained for him, and he made it a point to keep as much as possible out of their way. However, there were times when his business interests brought him into pretty close contact with them, and frequently he had a pretty narrow squeak for his life.

On more than one occasion he was chased across the prairie by a gang of irate cowboys, his horse keeping time to the rapid firing of pistols while bullets whizzed about his head like an army of angry hornets. But he always rode the fleetest steed that could be had and he was not long in leaving his pursuers a safe distance in the rear.

It was during one of these flights from a gang of vengeful cowboys that Dawson did a generous thing, bringing sunlight and gladness into three dark and miserable lives. It was an act which showed that, in spite of all his faults, there was still burning in his bosom a spark of true humanity.

He had just eluded his pursuers and seen them give up the chase and turn back when he came upon an old, rickety covered wagon standing at the edge of a belt of timber near a little water course. He was about to pass on without giving the wagon more than a cursory glance when suddenly there came to his ears a long, low, pitiful moan that told too plainly a story of deep mental anguish. Involuntarily he stopped and listened and after the lapse of a moment the moan was repeated, only this time it was more pitiful, more pathetic than ever.

As hard as Dawson was that moan touched his heart and stirred it strangely. Without hesitation he dismounted and walked to the wagon and, raising the cover, cautiously looked in. One glance was enough. It revealed to him a sad and touching picture.

Stretched on a bed of straw at one end of the wagon was the lifeless form of a poor emaciated woman, while huddled together near her, gazing agonizingly on her cold features, were a man and two little children. The living were almost as pale and hollow-eyed as the dead.

Dawson drew away from the wagon a little distance and for two or three minutes stood deeply engrossed in thought. A remarkable change had come over his features, and instead of the hard, cold, wicked expression that was natural to him, there was a softness and a gentleness in his eyes and face that was entirely new.

"Poor woman," he muttered at last with a sigh. "Poor little kids!" he said after a pause.

He went back to the wagon and, reaching in, touched the man on the shoulder.

"Come out here a moment," he said, softly. "I want to speak with you." The man got up slowly and stiffly and climbed down from the wagon. Dawson noticed that he was very frail and that he reeled and staggered as he walked.

"What do you want with me?" he asked of Dawson.

"That is your wife in there?" the latter replied questioning.

The man nodded.

"When did she die?"

"About an hour ago."

"Malaria?"

"Yes; she'd been sick a long time, and I'd started east with her. I got here yesterday and stopped. She had taken worse and I could go no further. I got a doctor last night, but he could not help her, and this morning she died."

"What are you going to do now?"

"I don't know."

"You'll have to bury her."

"Yes, I know."

"Have you any money?"

"Not a cent."

"Humph!"

"The doctor said I would have to apply to the county and have her buried as a pauper. I don't like to do that, though, would you?"

"No, I wouldn't."

"I might sell the wagon and horses for enough, but they are all I have left, and I don't know what would become of the children."

"No, it won't do to sell your team. The children are sick, ain't they?"

"Yes, and the doctor said that if I didn't get them into a healthier climate they would not live long."

"I believe him. They are terribly peaked and hollow-eyed. And you don't look much better, either."

"I'm not. I have been sick for months. That's why we have nothing. I took up a claim, but was not able to raise a crop, so what money I had was spent and we had nothing to live on."

"You are in a pretty tough row, it seems to me."

"I am. The Lord only knows what is to become of those poor little children. They are hungry now, and I don't know when or where they will get any food. If I could work I might earn something for them, but I can't work. I am so weak that I can scarcely stand on my feet."

"Have you had any breakfast?"

"No."

"Did you have any food yesterday?"

"Yes, just a bite or two of bread."

"Humph! No wonder you are weak."

"There was only a little food left, and the children cried for it. I couldn't eat it up from them."

"Of course not."

Dawson put his hand in his pocket and drew out a five-dollar bill.

"Here," he said, "take this. It will buy you something to eat for the present."

The man took the bill. There were tears in his eyes, and when he spoke his voice trembled.

"God bless you!" he said. "You are a good Christian."

Dawson started and turned pale. Then he came very near laughing, but remembering that death was near he refrained from it. It was the first time for many years that anyone had spoken to him like that—the first time he had been called a Christian. He turned and walked back to where he had left his horse. He started to mount, hesitated an instant, then sprang into his saddle. But he did not ride away.

He took a scrap of paper from his pocket, put something in it and rolled it up close. Then he rode back to the man and handed him the little parcel.

"You will find something in that," he said. "You called me a Christian, something I am farther from being than any man on earth, but somehow it seems good to know that somebody thinks better of me than I deserve. Take this paper and what it contains. It is yours."

He whirled his horse about and dashed away. The man opened the paper and inside of it he found a hundred-dollar bill. He looked at the money for a moment in blank astonishment, then he raised his head and looked after Dawson. The latter was away out on the prairie galloping madly to the westward.

The man's eyes filled with tears, and in feeble but joyous tones he cried:

"Thank God! This will save the lives of my little ones! Bless the man who gave it to me!"

That man had heard of Ike Dawson, the noted cattle thief, but he had no idea that it was to him he owed the lives of his children and of himself. But had he known the truth he would have blessed him just the same.—Detroit Free Press.

Chestnuts in France.

France produces annually about 300,000 tons of chestnuts.

SHE HAD NO HORNS TO BLOW.

Why a Spirited St. Louis Girl Did Not Rejoice.

There is a bright young woman in St. Louis who is the bread-winner for her family. She goes downtown every day, and her work is arduous, but not stultifying. She is fortunate enough to be able to use her brains, and her employers appreciate her ability.

She says that that fact is one of her compensations. However, it is dreary enough. In the bright holiday season she was tied to a dingy desk, and had only a glimpse of the gaiety and brightness of Christmas week. That glimpse was sufficient to make her long for more. The necessities of life had to be first in her consideration, however, and the luxuries took care of themselves, generally far away from her home.

She was not unhappy in spite of it all. Women are often brave, and will not allow their love for the easy things of life to obscure their appreciation of the fact that the hard things must be faced.

New Year's eve this girl went home tired and faint. She went to bed immediately and ate her frugal supper in her little bedroom. Her family take good care of her; that is another compensation.

Tired and dull, she soon went to sleep, to be awakened by the sound of bells and horns. The neighbors were celebrating the advent of the year 1898.

Turning over in bed the tired bread-winner said to her sister:

"We have no bells to ring, and no horns to blow, have we?"

"No," said the sister.

The wage-earner reflected a moment.

"To cry, or not to cry; that is the question," she thought. "No, I will not cry," she said to herself. Then her sense of humor, without which life would be hard indeed, came to her rescue.

"I have not even a dollar to blow—so I will blow my nose!" she exclaimed. Her sister laughed.

The year 1898 was greeted with merriment in that house.—St. Louis Republic.

A GOOD BED.

Nothing Is More Conducive to Health Than Such a Resting Place.

When one is tired and weary with the day's cares and duties, nothing is so delightful as a good bed. No matter how plain it is, if there is a fine spring and a comfortable mattress, one can sleep peacefully and rest well. To be sure, everyone likes to see a handsome bed, but comfort should never be sacrificed for looks, and rather than expend the greatest part of the money on the bed itself, it should be put into the spring and mattress.

There is nothing more delightful than a hair mattress. To buy ready-made it is rather expensive, providing one desires a good article, and if the housewife is at all ingenious, she can get one up at home without much trouble and at considerably less cost. Buy about 15 pounds of curled horse hair of best quality. Make a casing of the desired size of heavy cotton material, such as drilling or ticking, and bind all seams with cotton tape, leaving one end open. Spread the curled hair very evenly in the case, and with a long stout needle and cord catch through the mattress at intervals so as to keep the hair in place. A large darning needle may do, but if the mattress is very thick a still longer one will be necessary. The stitch should be taken through small pieces of leather or doubled pieces of the ticking in order not to be too much of a strain on the mattress and tear the goods. The end left open may be furnished with buttons and buttonholes or it may be sewed up and bound.

A mattress like this may be renovated without much trouble. The hair should be removed and placed in a tub of scalding water and soured up and down, then rinsed in cold water and spread on a sheet in the sun to dry. The casing should be washed and ironed, then filled and tacked as before. It will be clean and sweet as new, and much improved by the treatment.—Rural World.

Beans and Peas in a New Way.

Porridge is what we Americans call mush, and, as is set forth by the nursery rhyme, may be made of other foods beside Indian meal and oatmeal. There is a bean porridge, so valuable for people of delicate digestion that it is strange it is so rarely found upon our tables. We read of the wonderfully nutritious quality of beans, and straightaway strive to persuade the weakly members of the family to eat pork and beans, thereby causing them the very severest pangs of indigestion. There undoubtedly is great nourishment in well-cooked beans, and for strong people who are able to take sufficient exercise the Boston baked beans are excellent. For those, however, who must deny themselves this appetizing dish, the following will be found of great value: Beans or peas are to be cooked until thoroughly soft, then pressed through a sieve to reject the shell; butter and salt stirred in as for mashed potatoes, then piled in a baking dish and browned in the oven. Rolled in croquette shape and cooked in deep boiling fat, this pulp is also very good.—Boston Globe.

Queen Drops.

Cream one pound of washed butter and fine granulated sugar; add the yolks of eight eggs well beaten, one quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one pound of cleaned currants, then, alternately, the stiffly beaten whites and one pound of sifted pastry flour. Beat steadily for an hour, then bake as above, dusting the top of each cake before baking with a little powdered sugar.—Boston Budget.

To Prevent Ungainly Ankles.

If American girls would confine their use of low shoes indoors they would not risk the undue development of their ankles. French women are noted for their pretty feet, and they invariably wear high shoes for walking.—Chicago Tribune.

QUESTION OF SPONGES.

Solved by a Naut Holder to Secure Hygienic Advantages.

From a hygienic point of view, people seldom know what to do with a large sponge. One must have one for one's morning tub, and in this era of boarding houses, lodging, apartment hotel and small flat life, every inch of space is as precious as gold and must be economized and utilized to the best advantage.

When one is fortunate enough to be in possession of a large tiled bathroom, with hanging space for flesh brushes of all kinds and descriptions, bath towels measuring yards and yards, sprayers, shower baths and all the hundred and one things the modern healthy man and woman require to keep up with the present fad of cleanliness being absolutely necessary to healthfulness, what matters a sponge or two, large, small or medium sized, being hung in bold relief, to the eyes of the passer-by! The sponge, then, is as appropriate as an etching hanging on the wall of one's den would be.

But when one has only one room, or even two, one of which is bound to open on an air shaft, and one must use a common bathtub, or else a rubber affair, that folds up, then one has no spare room for sponges, flesh brushes, bath towels, etc. One cannot spread them out and leave them where the eyes of the visitor or friend will fall upon them, nor can one hide the sponge away and shut it up in a box out of sight, for that would be detrimental to the sponge and unhealthy for the bather.

Everyone knows what a disagreeable odor comes from a sponge that has been inclosed in a box while wet and shut away out of sight. And, again, we have all learned by bitter experience that hanging a sponge out of the window for the purpose of letting the sun and air get at it fills it with an amount of dirt and foreign particles flying around aimlessly in the air, which is anything but conducive to the preservation of the sponge in question.

For some time, in order to meet the absolute need of a receptacle which would keep your sponge sweet and let it dry by being exposed to the air, there has been for sale in the large shops an affair like an erab net, made of twine and celluloid hoops and frame, in which the sponge was placed and kept. These little affairs were clumsy, even the very smallest size made, as they had to be hung on the wall or the side of the washstand, and were therefore in plain evidence all the time.

Now the conundrum arose how to keep the sponge dry and sweet and yet not have it on show all the time. Well, like many another puzzle, some clever wits set to work to solve it and invent something pretty, something useful and something just what was wanted.

The Gordian knot seems to have been cut by the silversmiths. At present the little useful article comes only in sterling, is only within reach of those who have sufficient money not to care what they pay for something they want. This novelty is a sponge rack, pretty and practical.

It is made of heavy wire and stands on three or four little legs about five inches in height. They come in all sizes, and when the sponge is in them the air gets to it from every side, there is no danger of mustiness or a disagreeable odor and it does away with the necessity of any save an occasional sun bath for the sponge. The racks make a pretty ornament for the toilet stand, and in consequence the obnoxious sponge, instead of being an eyesore, is a thing of beauty and a joy forever.—N. Y. Herald.

SUGGESTIONS TO HOUSEWIVES.

Items of Information on Things in General.

Few cooks know the secret of "the boss chicken pie." Make a biscuit crust—a crust as you would prepare it for baking powder or short biscuit. Roll it half an inch thick, line a basin or pan with it, put in the chicken, that has already been cooked tender and seasoned, fill the dish half full of the gravy, add a generous lump of butter, put on the top crust, cutting a slit for the steam to escape, and bake. Serve the remainder of the gravy with it. The gravy that is put in with the chicken should be slightly thickened.

A good bacon pickle is made as follows: To each peck of salt add two ounces of refined saltpeter, and one and a half pounds of brown sugar or molasses. Make the brine strong enough to float an egg. Keep the meat in this pickle for six weeks, then take out and smoke; or when dry rub with wheat flour and put in a dry place.

A headache will almost invariably yield to the simultaneous application of hot water to the back of the neck and the feet. A large glass of hot water taken before retiring is much better than cathartics in cases of obstinate constipation, and taken night and morning is excellent in ordinary cases of dyspepsia.

To thin the buckwheat pancake batter with sweet milk is to make the cakes tender, and they will also brown more delicately.—Detroit Free Press.

The Young Wife's Social Duties.

To simply live alone, with no provision for the gratification of the social instinct, is apt to prove too severe upon the reserve forces of even the happiest marriage. There is some excuse to be made for the man who seeks society outside of the house, wherein no thought is given to social pleasure, while the wife is apt to grow petty and personal, and so less attractive as she shuts herself away from intercourse with others. This dropping out is very easy, but even when prosperity comes and large social functions are possible it is too late to gain that most valuable possession, friendship, which is entirely independent of financial success. To have and to hold a place in the social life of the world is not only the right, but the duty of the young wife who desires to have a home in its truest and best sense.—Helen Jay, in Ladies' Home Journal.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS

COMFORT FOR POULTRY.

An Arrangement Which Seems Perfect in Every Respect.

The poultry quarters arranged herewith is 12 feet long and 10 feet wide, but 12 feet is preferred by some, as it gives more floor room. A shows the upper floor where the perches or roosts and nests are placed. The roosts are made in a frame hinged to the north side of the house so they may be raised out of the way when the house is being cleaned. B shows roosts slightly raised; there should be a hook to hold the frame up when cleaning the house. The frame in which the roosts are fitted may be from three to four feet wide and should extend the length of the building. The floor is level except beneath the roost, where it is made on an incline ending in a dirt box, C, which has a lid or cover. This box should extend the length of the north side of house outside.

The nests, D, D, have a fastening, one closed, the other open or down. A slotted hole in one end of the fastening is held on the side of the nest with a wooden screw with a common nut washer. The other end of the fastening fits over a nail when raised and closed. This keeps the sitting hen on and others off. Nests are made separate, and should be 16 inches square and 12 inches high. They are placed on the south side of the inside of the house under the windows. A board 14 inches off the floor is placed over the nests. This gives plenty of room for light and ventilation.

Windows, E, E, E, are placed on the south side; F shows steps to upper floor. Ground floor or range room is shown at G. It should be boarded on all except the south side, which should be closed with netting. There should be a board with cleats or steps on it (the board not shown in illustration) leading from the lower to the upper floor, and a door made through the floor, to be closed on cold nights. This lower room is used in cold and wet weather for a range room and should have plenty of straw for the chickens to exercise in while getting the grain that is fed to them. There should be a dust box with good sharp grit. This room may be used to keep little chickens in in the early spring, wet or bad weather or dewy mornings.

In building this house it is not necessary to use costly materials, but it should be made tight so as to prevent cold drafts. A good plan is to line the inside with tarred or building paper. A house of this kind will cost more than a plain one or a shed, but as cleanliness is a breeder of disease and taking into consideration how easily this house may be kept clean it is really the cheapest house. Most cholera complaints are caused by unhealthy, filthy quarters and lice and mites combined working on the chickens. They take the stamina and vigor of the stock, diarrhea sets in and the chickens die. I have been all along this route, but since building a house easily kept clean and giving our birds better care we are not troubled with the cholera. Lice and mites may be kept down by using coal oil and carbolic acid on the roosts and whitewashing the building thoroughly. If the mites get on the chickens very bad dust them with good insect powder, have a good dust bath and have sulphur in the dust.—Capt. J. W. Rouse, in Farm and Home.

NOTES FOR BEEKEEPERS.

Adjusting boards should be used in hives of all weak stocks.

Colonies having defective queens are always the foundation of trouble.

Colonies selected for breeding should contain a good supply of drone comb. Little wooden troughs holding about a pint of sirup are good for feeding bees.

The supply of drones depends entirely on the amount of drone comb furnished.

Colonies selected for breeders should be pushed by early feeding to their utmost limit.

Do not feed in the morning, as it tends to cause robbing and to make the bees restless.

It is just as necessary to select for the production of drones as for the production of queens.

Pollen is always stored in or near the brood nest, and here is the place where the bees will cluster.

Bees are not apt to attach comb to cloth, so cloth divisions between frames serve as a guide.

Queen cells should never be retained in any colony except one that is in a natural, healthy condition.

Be sure that the entrances to the hives are kept open. The bees want good, fresh air to breathe.

Confine each colony to only as many combs as the bees can conveniently cover, giving more combs as needed.

Empty combs are valuable and should receive the best of care; if this is given, they can be made to last several years.

If any of the colonies are short of stores, give them candy; it can be laid on top of the frames above the cluster.

Now is a good time to make up a surplus of hives, so as to have them ready for use at any time they may be needed.—St. Louis Republic.

COTTON SEED MEALS.

No Other Food Varies Quite so Much in Composition.

Much has been said and written relative to the use of cotton seed meal as a cattle food. Nearly all investigators agree in giving it a high value and urge dairymen to use this material, not only because it is a cheap source of protein, but because it also has a high manurial value. Practical feeders differ greatly in their estimates of cotton seed meal. Some seem to use it very satisfactorily for awhile, and later conclude that the feed is not well adapted for their purposes. Occasionally a feeder observes that the health of his animals is affected by the feeding of cotton seed too freely, and it sometimes happens that even after animals have been fed for months with apparent success that they are injured by its continued use. It has also happened that cows fed upon cotton seed meal do well for a time and that later the milk flow is diminished without any apparent cause.

There are at present no other concentrated feeding stuffs which vary so much in composition as cotton seed meals from different sources and different mills. Within three weeks the Maine agricultural experiment station has examined samples varying from 22 per cent. to over 53 per cent. of protein. This great variation in different lots of cotton seed meal may explain the different estimates of different practical feeders and of the same feeders at different times. If a cow is fed a cotton seed meal containing 26 per cent. protein, and is then fed an equal weight of a meal containing 52 per cent., it is evident that the amount of protein which she receives will have been doubled by the change. If she has been fed up to her full capacity in the first instance, such an increase might result disastrously. On the other hand, changing from a cotton seed of high protein content to one of low protein content would diminish the milk flow unless the amount of meal fed is also correspondingly increased.—Rural World.

THE MODERN CHEVIOT.

It Is a Compact, Well-Formed and Profitable Sheep.

The distinctively local breed of sheep on the Cheviot hills, lying along the border of England and Scotland, is the Cheviot, typical specimens of which are graphically depicted herewith. The old Cheviot sheep was a leggy, thin-winded animal, though very hardy and vigorous, enduring the vicissitudes of storms and colds nearly as well as black-faced sheep. The modern Cheviot is a compact, well-formed sheep, well filled out in the quarters, with no undue amount of daylight below it. The tails of all Cheviots are left long enough to reach the hocks. This needed protection, especially to the udders of ewes, is rendered practicable on account of the dry nature of the usual forage, which obviates the danger of scouring. The legs below the knees and hocks, as well as the face, is covered by a close growth of short, stiff, white hair. The fleece is so dense and close as to be almost impenetrable to rain and cold. The ewes clip from five to seven pounds each, rams two to three pounds more. The wool is of medium length, strong and firm, furnishing the staple for those durable cloths known as cheviots. The live weight of ewes and wethers ranges from 100 to 120 pounds. The mutton is finely marbled, juicy and palatable. Ewes are prolific, averaging three lambs to two ewes annually, and are good mothers, with abundance of milk.—Farm and Home.

CHEVIOT SHEEP AS THEY APPEAR AT HOME.

A Steady Walking Gait.

Walking is one of the gaits that is nearly always neglected, and yet an active, quick, clear-footed walk is a valuable gait to the horse intended for the farm, for use as a roadster or for a saddle. A horse broken to harness is generally trained for awhile at the side of some steady old animal, and the youngster, if inclined to walk fast, soon begins to learn that it is not the thing to do. For that reason it is best to break a young horse in a single harness or under the saddle, and train him to be a good walker, as well as good at other gaits. A three-year-old is generally a better walker than he will be at any other age if he is kept as a harness horse, unless specially trained with a view to brisk, active movement in that gait.—Prairie Farmer.

Training a Shepherd Pup.

To train a shepherd puppy to drive cows and sheep, be sure that the sire and dam were trained to do what you wish of the pup, and that he naturally goes to the heel and not to the head. If these are secured, the training is easy, and only consists in teaching the pup to come at once when called. Then take him on a string with you a few times, so as to let him get used to seeing the cows or sheep, and let them become acquainted with the pup. Then let him go, but keep him near you to avoid getting him hurt and frightened, and little by little he will come to understand what he is to do and how to do it.—Dakota Field and Farm.

The successful production of comb honey depends upon care in every detail; one essential is to have the bees in prime condition.

BEAR AND DOG FIGHT TO DEATH.

Staghead Clings So Tight to Bruin That He Came Out Harmless.

The following capital bear story comes from Klickitat county, Washington, through a correspondent, "A. M.": Not long ago a party of sheepmen, consisting of Will Coleman, Milt Morehead, George Van Ostran and a herder, were in the vicinity of "swamp corals," on the upper Klickitat river, when they discovered a yearling brown bear. The party had with them a number of coyote hounds and a shepherd dog, and the dogs immediately treed the bear. The bear, being only a yearling, and treed so easily, Van Ostran offered to climb the tree and shake him out, evidently thinking him on a par with a coon, but the bear, refusing to be shaken, held on with tenacity.

A rope was then thrown Van Ostran, who made a noose and with a dexterous throw succeeded in catching the bear about the head. One of the men of the party was riding a good cow horse, and to him Van Ostran threw the end of the rope, and the latter, taking a turn around the horn of the saddle, succeeded in bringing down the bear. And now the fight began in earnest. The bear made a rush for the horse, and struck out with his right paw so well that he cut a deep gash in the horse's shoulder and at the same time freed himself from the lariat.

The sheepmen, believing that discretion is ever the better part of valor, betook themselves without loss of time to the highest limb of a bull pine, where they could in safety watch the battle going on below. The bear had successfully routed the three hounds, when the shepherd dog decided to take a hand in the game. The bear made a swipe at him and, catching him by the collar, held on, while the shepherd dog danced a jig. Having rid himself one by one of the dogs, it looked as though bruin was coming out "high cock of the game," when Rattler, a staghead belonging to A. Smythe, seized the bear by the throat, and was immediately locked in an embrace such as only a bear can give, and the two rolled over and over on the ground. But the hound held on and lay apparently so close to the bear's breast that he was unable to squeeze him very hard.

They fought thus for 20 minutes, until at last the bear succumbed, with his windpipe cut in two. One of the men said he had seen many a bear fight in his day, but never such a game fight as on this occasion. It is needless to say that Rattler is much honored in Arlington as the champion bear dog.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Not Helpful.

"If I were you," said the man who has bought an encyclopedia and several sets of biography, "I would call on the man in the next room."

"Is he fond of good type and fine pictures?" inquired the book agent.

"I don't know about that. But he is a great reader. He spends all the time he can get perusing his books."

"Well, I'll go and see him. But I don't expect much. When a man gets right down to reading his books, instead of merely collecting them, he generally feels that he has about all that he can attend to without buying any more."—Washington Star.

A Remarkable Cat.

One of the remarkable Maine cats is owned by Mrs. Howard Haggett, of Arrowsville. One of her eulogists says that when she is coming toward you she resembles a fox; when going from you she resembles a coon. She goes to the shore, sits on an ice floe, and when a fish comes in sight, puss will dive, catch him every time, and take the prize to the house for inspection.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

African Monkeys.

Africa's monkeys are giving out. In the neighborhood of the Gold Coast they have been exterminated, and last year the colony could collect only 67,600 monkey skins, whereas in 1894 168,405 skins, valued at $205,000, were exported.—N. Y. Sun.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Novelties in the World of the Modes Noted in Passing.

There is something always eminent—rich and ladylike in the appearance of lustrous corded silk, be the color black, gray, fawn, moss green, plum tints or cream white. This winter these repped silks are preeminently fashionable, together with many other materials woven in similar corded effects. The circular, killed and princess outlines which fashion now favors are particularly adapted to these rich materials.

Many of the demi-trained dress skirts are cut with nine gores and at the back some are box-plaited and others fan-plaited.

A great number of the new coats are made decidedly longer than any worn last season. Very tall, slender women may congratulate themselves on the change.

The plaited round waist and the full Russian blouse waist contest for favor with the numberless chic little coat basques, very short, very smart and very much trimmed.

German broadcloth in dark Russian red, or the favorite blue shade of the winter, is noted among elegant models in redingotes and other enveloping garments of the season. Some of the very expensive wraps are lined throughout with fur.

Owl and pheasant plumage is still in the millinery world. It is not uncommon to see an owl's head with spread wings used whole for the ornamentation of a hat. Of course, there is no room for any other kind of trimming.

The simplest and perhaps the most fashionable bodice for evening wear is the full blouse shape of chiffon, dropping over a fitted silk lining, the top cut in square or rounding fashion, with a full tulle ruche, a narrow band of fur, a fall of lace or beaded revers to finish the edge. The sleeves consist of short, full puffs similarly trimmed.

Some new silks show a white ground with colored garter snakes and earthworms gliding along and casting queer, long shadows. Other grounds are strewn with ears of corn, the natural size; great tufts of grass, bunches and trails of ivy, all giving the most bizarre effect. One will need to train one's self up to them.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Could See the Name.

The duchess of X—once went to Greenwich to see the marvels of the observatory. It was a lovely night, and for the fair duchess' benefit the great telescope was duly leveled at the dazzling field of stars.

"What is that star?" she said, pointing to a very bright one.

"Oh, that's Aldebaran, a star of the first magnitude."

"Is it very far off?" asked her grace.

"About six or seven light-years, your grace."

"What is a light-year?" "Merely an expression which one uses to convey an idea of the distance which light travels in a year. Roughly speaking, light travels at the rate of 190,000 miles in a second, and there are about 31,000,536 seconds in a year. In one year, therefore, light travels about 5,991,840,000 miles. The expression of 'light-year' includes these figures."

"And is that star all those millions of miles away?"

"Yes, your grace, as nearly as we can calculate."

"Then, all I can say," remarked the duchess, "is that you must have wonderful good eyes to make out that star's name at that distance, even with this big telescope. It's really most marvelous!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

White Petticoats Again.

White petticoats will be much worn next spring and summer, and will be elaborately lace trimmed. Many of the white skirts are made of the sheerest fabrics, and have a Spanish flounce trimmed with fine lace in Vandyke points. A fall of lace, put on full, edges the flounce.—St. Louis Republic.

A Benefactress' Kind Act.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. John Tansey, of 130 Baker Street, Detroit, Michigan, is one of those women who always know just what to do in all trouble and sickness. One that is a mother to those in distress. To a reporter she said: "I am the mother of ten children and have raised eight of them. Several years ago we had a serious time with my daughter, which began when she was about sixteen years old. She did not have any serious illness, but seemed to gradually waste away. Having never had consumption in our family, as we come of good old Irish and Scotch stock, we did not think it was that. Our doctor called the disease by an old name which, I afterward learned, meant lack of blood."

"It is impossible to describe the feeling John and I had as we noticed our daughter slowly passing away from us. We finally found, however, a medicine that seemed to help her, and from the first we noticed a decided change for the better, and after three months' treatment her health was so greatly improved you would not have recognized her. She gained in flesh rapidly and was soon in perfect health. The medicine used was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I have always kept these pills in the house since and have recommended them to many people. I have told mothers about them and they have effected some wonderful cures."

"Every mother in this land should keep these pills in the house, for they are good for many ailments, particularly those arising from impoverished or diseased blood, and weakened nerve force."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

CAUSE FOR ALARM.

How baldness begins.

How to prevent it.

Every person, male or female, shrinks from baldness. It adds to the appearance of age and is a serious discomfort. The cases are rare when the falling out of the hair may not be stopped, and a new and healthy growth of the hair promoted. The hair grows in the scalp like a plant in the soil. If a plant flourishes, it must have constant attention; it must be watered regularly and find its food in the soil where it is rooted. It's so with the hair. Neglect is usually the beginning of baldness. Dandruff is allowed to thicken on the scalp. The hair begins to loosen. The scalp loses its vitality. The hair, insufficiently nourished, begins to fade and to fall. The instant need in such a case is some practical preparation which, supplying the needed nourishment to the scalp, will feed the hair, give it strength, and so produce a strong and healthy growth. All this is done by Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor, the most practical and valuable preparation for the hair that can be obtained. It tones up the scalp, does away with dandruff, stops the hair from falling, restores the original color to gray or faded hair, and gives an abundant and glossy growth. Those who are threatened with approaching baldness will be interested in the following voluntary statement, made by Alderman S. J. Green, of Spencer, Iowa. He writes: "About four months ago, my hair commenced falling out so rapidly that I became alarmed, and being recommended Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor by a druggist, I resolved to try this preparation. I have been now using it for three months, and am much gratified to find that my hair has ceased falling out and also that hair which had been turning gray for the past five years has been restored to its original color, dark brown. It gives me much pleasure to recommend this dressing."—S. J. GREEN, Alderman, Spencer, Iowa.

Those who are interested in preserving and beautifying the hair will do well to send for Dr. Ayer's Curebook. A story of cures told by the cured. This book of 100 pages is sent free, on request, by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Twiddle your thumbs, if you've nothing better to do, in the time that's saved by washing with Pearline. Better be sitting in idleness than to spend unnecessary time washing with soap, doing unhealthy and wearying work. But almost every woman has something or other that she talks of doing "when I get time for it." Washing with Pearline will save time for it.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet both sent free by mail. Mention The Paris (Ky.) News and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer. (25p-1mo)
